AMAZED AT BAY STATE POLICY

Doesn't Comprehend How Handful of Negroes Can Hold Up Appropriation.

(From Our Regular Correspondent.) WASHINGTON, D. C., March 3.-The opposition of the negroes of Massachusetts to the Bay State Legislature max ing the proposed appropriation of $2%. 00 for an exhibit at the Jamestown Ex-position, has caused the bill to be held up. While the total colored population of the State is insignificant as compared with the total population of Massachu-setts, the vote between the two parties up there is close always, and as the darkeys always vote the Republican ticket, it is absolutely necessary that they be taken into account in the matter of legislation proposed by a Republican legislature.

The National Suffrage Association, an organization of colored men formed for the purpose of protesting against the disfranchisement of negroes, appears to have an influential branch in smasachuseits, and this body made a violent protest against the appropriation. The protest was based on the ground that the Commonwealth in her constitution disfranchised a large portion of the colored population, and that the laws of the State compelled common carriers of paasengers to furnish separate cars of compariments from the two races. In other words, that Virginia had a "Jim crow" car law.

Glics B. Jackson, of Richmond, the colored lawyer of that city and directorgeneral of the Negro Exposition and Development Company, which is planning to have a great annex to the exposition, showing the progress the negro race has made since it was freed, heard of the opposition to the bill, and, after communicating with Governor Guild, went to Boston this week and appeared before the Committees on Federal Relations of the two houses of the Legislature. The meeting was held in Governor Guild's office, Glies talked very plainly to the members of the committee, He said he did not know anything about the organization of colored men which was opposing the appropriation, but he thought it most remarkable that a handful of colored people, mostly from other States, should dictate the policy of the great manufacturing State of Massachusetts. So far as the discrimination of Virginia laws against the colored race was concerned, it did not cause him any trouble.

He liked to-ride in separate cars, and the chair cars and the Pullmans on Virginia roads were aways open to him, and to every other member of his race who had the price. He told of riding from Washington to Richmond in a Pullman with two of the wealthlest men of Richmond, with whom he talked business all the way.

Nothing to Do With Virginia. Nothing to Do With Virginia.

Besides, Giles told the committée and the Governor, he could not see that the people of Massachusests, black or white, had anything to do with Virginia laws. That was a matter for the people who lived under them, and not for people in other States. He wanted to see the appropriation made, and the State of Massachusetts ought to want it made in order that one of the greatest of the original thirteen colonies should be properly represented at the exposition.

Giles says he believes his speech had a marked effect. The spectacle of a ceal-black negro from Virginia journeying to Massachusetts to defend his State against the attacks of darkeys who had left Virginia, was unique, and must have impressed the committee in that way Giles was not trying to get an approposition of the control of the con Glies was not trying to get an appro-priation for his end of the exposition, but was simply trying to help along the general work of the exposition. Ill Wind Blows Widow Good.

It seems that the efforts of the Republican organization in Virginia to oust the widow of the late keeper of the lighthouse at Jones Point, on the Potomac, and put in a voter, will not be successful after all. The President assured a delegation of leading citizens of Alexandria, who called at the White House delegation of leading citizens of Alexandria, who called at the White House this week and urged that Mrs. Grenwood be retained, that he would see that the necessary order was issued.

It is learned now that F. E. Wilkins, former keeper of the light at Cedar Point, has been appointed to take charge of the Jones Point light, and would be discharging his duties, were it not that the family of the widow has chicken-pox, so that the new keeper is afraid to venture to his station. The lighthouse tender Holly came up to the lighthouse one day recently with the new keeper aboard, but, when he found that Mrs. Greenwood's children had the juvenile ailment, he refused to go to work.

TO APPROPRIATE EIGHT MILLIONS

Conference Committee, Representing Both Houses, Fix Amounts.

RAISE THE UNIVERSITY FEE

Compromise Reached at $20, Instead of $10, As Fixed By Senate.

After three hours of work, the conference committees, representing the two branches of the Legislature, in the final consideration of the general appropriation bill, disposing of between eight and nin millions of dollars for the ensuing two years, reached a practical agreement last night, each side conceding as little as possible and both apparently satisfied with the result of the evening's work.

"The Senate never gets the small end of the horn." said Mr. Wickham, of Hanover, chairman of the Finance Committee of the Senate, smiling cheerfully, but otherwise uncommunicative, in response to a query as to how the upper branch fared in the final skirmish.

"It was a draw," said Colonel Bowman of Salem, chairman of the Finance Committee of the House of Delegates, appear-ing anything but worsted. "We came out about even, I think."

University Fee Again.

Most important of all the changes made, as a result of the conference, was made, as a result of the conference, was with reference to the university fee at the University of Virginia. The general appropriation bill came from the House carrying an annuity of $75,000, an increase of $35,000, for the University of Virginia without conditions. In the Senate a clause was added making the appropriation conditional upon the reduction in the university fee to $10, not including the contingent fund of $10. Up to this time the fee has been $40, not including the contingent fund. The Senate amendment was a bone of contention in the conference. The House chairman was opposed to a condition of any sort. A compromise was finally reached, fixing the fee at $20, not including the contingent fund.

In view of the fact that there was bitter opposition among many senators to a fee of any sort and that Mr. Strode, of Amherst, leader of the fight, rather reluctantly accepted $10 as a compromise, declaring at the time that he considered this $10 too much, the conference report on this point may cause trouble for the general appropriation bill. Mr. Strode was out of the city yesterday and it could not be learned what attitude he will take.

While they are usually accepted, conference reports are not binding, and they have upon several occasions been rejected by the houses, creating the necessity for two or more conferences. The report must be accepted or rejected as a whole. It cannot be considered in its parts. In view of the fact that there was bit-parts.

"I have two or three Emes seen conference reports on the general appropriation bill turned down," said Colonel Bowman last night, discussing the matter generally. "It is the whole report or nothing. The changes are not considered appreciately."

The Conference.

The Conference.

The Senate amendments to the House bill were so few that there will probably be no trouble unless there comes some difficulty over the University fee and the attitude of the House committee may effectively check any further movement in this direction as being futile. The difference between the two bills as they went to the Conference Committee was something under $9,000 for the two years. This included some necessary additions the House had omitted to make, and over which there was no contest.

In the conference last night, which lasted until after 11 o'clock, the Senate amendments were forced down in several minor respects, further reducing the difference. The House Committee agreed to the increase in the salary of the judges of the Supreme Court of Appeals from $4,000 to $5,000, and also allowed the $400 each for the three unsalarled members of the Board of Fisheries. Objection was made, however, to the additional $7,000 allowed by the Senate for public printing. As a compromise, this amount was cut half in two. The appropriation, as fixed As a compromise, this amount was cut half in two. The appropriation, as fixed by the House, was $28,000, was changed by the Senate to $35,000, and is reduced by the compromise to $31,500. The committees will meet again to-morrow morning to give the final touches

The committees will meet again tomorrow morning to give the final touches to the report, which will then be made to both houses. The committee is composed of Messrs, H. T. Wickhem, Echals and Shackelford, from the Senate, and Messrs,
A. M. Bowman, Pitts and Byrd, from the House. The bill will carry an aggregate appropriation of about $8,400,000 for the next two years, an increase of more than $1,000,000 over the general appropriation for the last two years.

The supplementary or omnibus appropriation bill, carrying special sums aggregating about $400,000, will be taken up in the House to-morrow, and may be disposed of in a single sitting. It will then run the gauntlet in the Senate, and there will probably follow another conference over this special budget.
